Joyce Rebora: Artist's Statement

For several years, I have been making small sculptures out of wood. Sometimes the sculpture takes the form of a little person which I paint and add fiber to for hair. I also frequently use a simple house form. This shape can be transformed by materials to convey diverse messages. I consider each of my pieces, whether houses or people, to be a sort of a self-portrait.

For about the past 10 years, I've shown my small sculptures and paintings on wood at the Vale Craft Gallery. I have a BFA from Mundelein College and an MA from Columbia College. I also took classes for several years at the school of the Art Institute. For many years, I taught Art at Columbia College and North Park College, both in Chicago. My sculpture, paintings and drawings have been shown all over the Midwest and have won several awards.
